x "Celestial" Power Modifier

[-- need to clean up this section – it's currently just a datadump of Kelly's forum post --]

Going over the guidelines in Powers, powers in In Nomine are

1. not generally affected by mundane countermeasures - no environments or naturally occurring phenomena will shut down all In Nomine abilities.
2. Sometimes countered by anti-powers,
 - a. in the form of supernatural anti-powers such as the Song of Shields, which blocks perception-based powers, which gives -5%. However, I don't recall if there are any supernatural powers that would shut down attunements in general - does any remember any examples of such?

- b. There are not, however, technological anti-powers - there are no pieces of tech that will shut down most powers reliably, barring essentially supernatural one-offs, like a Vapulan computer that creates a Song of Shields.
3. Some powers (resonances, mostly), have required disadvantages, in the form of prohibitions for angels, and required behavior for most demons (must make target believe your lies, must make target accept a Geas, and so forth). I think these can disadvantages can mostly be boiled down to a -15 point disadvantage (Vow of Truthfulness, in the case of Seraphim, for example). These required disadvantages

- a. do not cause the modified power to disappear immediately on violation, but rather only gradually (by imposing a -1 to use them every time you violate the disadvantage). This is worth +5% to the power modifier.
- b. require about a week's worth of effort at a tether to remove a failure, for +0% to the power modifier. Therefore, since a -15 point disadvantage would normally be worth -15%, this part of the modifiers is worth -10%.

4. Powers in In Nomine channel the essence of creation, which is everywhere, and cannot be cut off, which is worth -0% as a modifier.

Note that none of these modifiers apply to all In Nomine powers. Unless I'm misremembering, there are simply no powers that can shut down attunements that specifically effect only yourself: there's no "dispel magic" equivalent that would shut down a Malakite of Stone's invulnerability, for instance. That means that such powers would actually have a -0% Symphonic modifier. Powers that affect other people would have the -5% version of the modifier, since the Song of Shields can shut them out. And resonances, specifically, have the required disadvantage modifier.

I guess we should really split out the required disadvantages part of Symphonic into a Pact that just applies to the resonances. It doesn't change the cost of anything I've written up so far, just how it's described: it becomes Symphonic -5% and Pact (Dissonance Condition) -10%, instead of Symphonic -15%.

Symphonic should also include the following modifiers to all powers that have it (including the 0% version for strictly personal powers):

Symphonic powers are subject to crippling on a critical failure of an activation roll. A crippled power is disabled for a number of hours equal to the margin of failure of the activation roll, minimum 1 hour.

Activation rolls for Symphonic powers are subject to Divine and Infernal intervention, the direct attention of God and Lucifer, respectively. If a roll comes up all 1s on the dice is a Divine intervention, and a roll that is all 6s is an Infernal invention. On an intervention, the relevant being intercedes, to good or bad effects based on how the being perceives the character who made the roll. Generally, angels and Soldiers of God benefit from Divine interventions, and suffer from Infernal inventions, while demons and Soldiers of Hell are the opposite.

An intervention is always has a powerful effect on the character who rolled it, and their allies in the vicinity. A favorable intervention should swing a situation towards the side of the character who rolled it, or come close to assuring victory if they were already winning, while an unfavorable intervention will leave the character who rolled it at a serious disadvantage, or come very close to outright defeating them if they were previously losing.

Success rolls to activate powers are:

- Not modified by multiple powers on.
- Not generally subject to the limitations on retrying: retries are not at -1 and do not cost FP.
- Subject to some Extra Effort rules: Characters can spend FP to boost their effective skill with using powers. Each FP spent boosts a roll by 1, with no Will roll required. However, such FP can only come from a Symphonic Energy Reserve, not from "physical" FP.

Resonances, specifically, receive bonuses or penalties to success rolls based on several factors:

- +2 if in direct contact with the subject.
- +1 if within 1 yard of the subject.
- -1 if the subject is within direct line of sight, but more than 10 yards away.
- -1 if an audio and video reproduction of the subject is available.
- -2 if only an audio reproduction is available.

- -3 if only a video reproduction is available.

Angelic resonances that gather information can work on recordings of a subject, although they only apply to the subject at the time of the recording, not as they currently are. Demonic information-gathering resonances cannot work through recordings, but they do function over live media.

Symphonic powers can be used to Power Block, Dodge, or Parry, if appropriate.

Symphonic powers can be resisted by spending FP, but only from an appropriate Symphonic Energy Reserve.

Symphonic powers cannot generally take advantage of power stunts such as combining powers, temporary enhancements, or using abilities at default.
